FLOOR DEBATE

February 20, 2002 LR 6

there's been a lot of discussion for quite some time now about negotiating in good faith. Can you tell me more details about that negotiating in good faith? What, could, should the outcome be from negotiating in good faith?

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Well, once the request has been made to negotiate a compact, then the Governor is supposed to negotiate in good faith, and I don't know that I can define exactly what that is, but it certainly would not involve any kind of stalling tactics or any kind of end run around trying to negotiate a compact. It would mean doing it in good faith, trying to arrive at a solution that is equitable to both sides.

SENATOR SMITH: So, basically, if it's passed on the ballot and so forth, it's going to happen. What...what impact...

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Well, now, no, it's...not necessarily. The tribes have to request it first and, you know, there are four tribes in Nebraska recognized federally and I'm not sure that all of them will want to negotiate. It may be only one tribe, or it may be all four. So it doesn't happen automatically. There has to be a request for it.

SENATOR SMITH: But, basically, the Governor would have to ultimately grant that agreement. Well, what impact could the Governor have?

SENATOR SCHIMEK: The Governor would have a great deal of impact as to the provisions. You know, we talked briefly yesterday about revenues and I said that originally the intention of IGRA was not that any revenue should go to the state, but over time that has eroded. And some states, when they first compacted with their tribes, they requested revenues and I...I believe, and I may be wrong on this, but I believe in the state of Connecticut, for instance, the state government gets about $80 million a year from the tribes in that state. So those are the kinds of things that you negotiate. You negotiate how old people have to be to even participate in the casinos. You negotiate perhaps what...what kind of a management arrangement that you would have. I don't...I can't even imagine all the details that there would be.
